A PRACTICAL COMPANION TO YOUR WILL

Your Will is important, but it can't contain everything and other estate-planning documents

Leaving Answers, Not Questions is a practical guide to help you organise the everyday information your family or trusted person may need if they suddenly have to step in.

It's useful not only after a death, but also if you become seriously ill, are unexpectedly hospitalised, lose capacity or are temporarily unable to manage your own affairs.

WHAT YOU CAN RECORD

Important contacts and documents
Where key documents are kept and who to contact

Financial and insurance information
Details that help family identify accounts, policies and providers

Household accounts and services
What is needed to keep everyday life running

Digital information
Guidance on online accounts and digital matters, without turning the book into a password store

Personal wishes and instructions
The things family may otherwise have to guess

Other important parts of your life
Business, creative work, publishing, memberships or anything unique to you

It does not replace a Will, Enduring Power of Attorney or professional legal advice. It complements those documents by helping you leave the practical information they generally do not contain.

Leave answers, not questions.

By Australian author Kay Johnson with Xanthe Shotton. Available in paperback and Kindle on Amazon Australia. Scan the QR code to view the book.

This resource is for general organisational purposes and is not legal, financial or medical advice.